Letter from the Bishop

Dear Clergy and Lay Faithful of the Diocese of Victoria, As many of you know, last month the Supreme Court of Canada overturned the law against assisted suicide and gave Parliament one year to write a new law.

With an upcoming federal election this fall, there is not enough quality time for Parliament to thoroughly research, hold serious public consultations, and formulate a new comprehensive law. If the Conservative Government invoked the Notwithstanding Clause, this very important issue could receive the time it needs to be adequately addressed. Postcards addressed to Justice Minister Peter MacKay, asking him to use the Notwithstanding Clause, have been made available to you. You are encouraged to please sign the card and return it to the government. In doing so, you'll add your voice to thousands of others urging our governing politicians to act responsibly and prudently. This moral issue is connected deeply to our mission to love and care for life at all of its stages. Please continue to advocate for quality palliative care so that Canadians are not drawn to suicide out of fear, isolation and despair. Our call to corporal works of mercy by visiting and comforting the sick and dying are especially needed at this time in our society. We must do our part in transforming a culture of death into a culture of life.

In Communion,

Most Reverend Gary Gordon, Bishop of Victoria

Good Friday Sermon

By the Pope's preacher, Fr. Raniero Cantalamessa

A profound reflection for Divine Mercy Sunday

“The true martyrs of Christ don't die with their fists closed but with hands joined together in prayer. The slaughter of Christians is taking place before the indifference of the world institutions.” Christians, Fr. Cantalamessa stressed, “certainly aren't the only victims of the homicidal violence being witnessed in the world, but one cannot ignore the fact that in many countries they are the chosen and most frequent victims.” “Then yesterday came the news of the 147 Christians who became victims of the jihadist rage of Somali extremists at a university campus in Kenya. Whoever has the fate of their won religion at heart cannot remain indifferent to what is happening,” he added. After all, “Jesus said to his disciples one day, ‘The hour is coming when whoever kills you will think he is offering service to God’. Perhaps never before have these words found such precise fulfillment as they do today.” “A third-century bishop, Dionysius of Alexandria, has left us a testimony of an Easter celebrated by Christians during the fierce persecutions by the Roman emperor Decius: First we were set on and surrounded by persecutors and murderers, yet we were the only ones to keep festival even then. Every spot where we were attacked became for us a place for celebrations whether field, desert, ship, inn, or prison. The most brilliant festival of all was kept by the fulfilled martyrs, who were feasted in heaven. This is the way Easter will be for many Christians this year, 2015 after Christ,”

Fr. Cantalamessa noted. “The disturbing indifference of world institutions and public opinion in the face of all this killing of Christians” must therefore be “denounced”, “recalling what such indifference has sometimes brought about in the past.” Otherwise, “all of us and all our institutions in the West risk being Pilates who wash our hands.” “True martyrs for Christ do not die with clenched fists but with their hands joined in prayer.” “We have had many recent examples of this. Christ is the one who gave the twenty-one Coptic Christians beheaded in Libya by ISIS this past February 22 the strength to die whispering the name of Jesus.” Fr. Cantalamessa urged: “Let us not think about social evils collectively: hunger, poverty, injustice, the exploitation of the weak. These evils are spoken about often (even if it is never enough), but there is the risk that they become abstractions—categories rather than persons. Let us think instead of the suffering of individuals, people with names and specific identities; of the tortures that are decided upon in cold blood and voluntarily inflicted at this very moment by human beings on other human beings, even on babies.” “To forgive with his same greatness of soul does not entail just a negative attitude through which one renounces wishing evil on those who do evil; it has to be transformed instead into a positive will to do good to them, even if it is only by means of a prayer to God on their behalf.” Today, “the problem of violence disturbs us, shocks us, and it has invented new and horrendous forms of cruelty and barbarism today. We Christians are horrified at the idea that people can kill in God's name.” “God's true intention is expressed by the commandment ‘You shall not kill’.” “Jesus overcame violence not by opposing it with a greater violence but by enduring it and exposing all its injustice and futility. He inaugurated a new kind of victory that St. Augustine summed up in three words: Victor quia victima: Victor because victim.” So we must offer “forgiveness” even to our “most relentless enemies”.
